

ENGLISH SUMMARIES

Jan Kwapisz: Mieczysław Grzesiowski (1923–2017) . . . . .	3
An obituary of Mieczysław Grzesiowski, a Latinist and the long-time secretary of the editorial board of “Meander”.
Plutarch: Gryllus, or Beasts Are Rational . . . . .	9
Plutarch’s dialogue translated into Polish by Katarzyna Jażdżewska.
Two Passages of Virgil’s Georgics . . . . .	23
Virgil’s description of the sky ( Georg. I 231–251) and his excursus on the power of love ( ibid. II 242–265) are printed here in Aleksandra Arndt’s Polish translation.
Anna Skolimowska: The Society of Drunkards and Gluttons ( Bibones et Comedones ): Just a Scholarly Myth . . . . .	25
A sentence of Jan Zambocki’s letter of 1527 to Jan Dantyszek led Kazimierz Hartleb to the conclusion that at that time in the court of Sigismundus the Elder there existed a convivial society of Bibones et Comedones . As the present article shows, that hypothesis, formulated in 1937 and taken over by many later scholars, was based on a misunderstanding and such a society never existed.
Joanna Usakiewicz: Descartes’s Use of Latin in Polemics, on the Basis of His Letter to Voetius . . . . .	33
The article discusses employment of various stylistic techniques, such as irony, in Descartes’s polemic against Gisbertus Voetius.
Adam Łukaszewicz: Ancient Egypt Seen from the Perspective of 19 th -Century Warsaw. Some Notes on the Margin of the New Edition of Bolesław Prus’s Pharaoh . . . . .	67
Bolesław Prus’s vision of ancient Egypt presented in his novel Pharaoh (1895) is contrasted here with discoveries and hypotheses of 19 th -century Egyptology. This leads to discussion of the sources of the novel.

- Barbara Brzuska: “Everything Here Is So Familiar”. Henryk Sienkiewicz, a Student of the Academy of Warsaw, in the Ancient World . . . . . 101
 The words quoted in the title come from a letter written by Sienkiewicz from Athens. The present article tries to show what knowledge of ancient Greece and Rome the future author of Quo Vadis derived from his studies at the Academy of Warsaw (a surrogate of the University of Warsaw, abolished earlier by the Tsar) in the years 1866–1871.
- Krzysztof Zimny: War Elephants in Hellenistic Armies – Part 2 . . . . . 119
 Use of elephants in battles in the Hellenistic period is discussed on the basis of the testimony of historians.
- Joachim Śliwa: Mediterranean Archaeology in the Jagiellonian University (1897–1998) . . . . . 143
 In 1897, a chair of classical archaeology, the first such chair in the Polish territory, was created in the Jagiellonian University. Its first head was Professor Piotr Bieńkowski. His disciples were appointed to the same office in several universities after the rebirth of Poland. After World War II, classical archaeology started to transform itself into Mediterranean archaeology, because its field of interest encompassed Egypt and the Middle East as well. A chair of Mediterranean archaeology, directed by Professor Maria Ludwika Bernhard, was created in the Jagiellonian University in 1954; but in 1998 that entity was divided into the Chair of Egyptian and Middle Eastern Archaeology and the Chair of Classical Archaeology.
- Elwira Buszewicz: Dante “among the Wise” . . . . . 165
 A review of Maria Maślanka-Soro’s book Antyczna tradycja epicka u Dantego (The Ancient Epic Tradition in Dante’s Work).
- Jerzy Wojtczak-Szyszkowski: A New Study of Klemens Janicki’s Life and Works . . . . . 171
 A review of Ignacy Lewandowski’s book Poeta laureatus, devoted to Klemens Janicki (1516–1543), a Polish humanist renowned for his Latin elegies.
- Rafał Matuszewski: Attica: Terra Abscondita? . . . . . 173
 A review of three recently published books concerning archeological research on ancient Athens and Attica.
- Adam Mazurkiewicz: Digital Insight into Greco-Roman Antiquity . . . . . 189
 A review of Konrad Dominas’s book Internet jako nowa przestrzeń recepcji literatury antycznej (The Internet as a New Space for The Reception of Ancient Literature).

- Katarzyna Pietruczuk: Trackers of Oxyrhynchus Again in London . . . . . 193
A review of Tony Harrison's The Trackers of Oxyrhynchus staged by Jimmy Walters in London's Finborough Theatre.
- Inga Grzeźczak: Some Unobvious Aspects of "Meander", or How a Septuagenarian Can Amaze You . . . . . 203
A collection of peculiar and jocular texts from seventy volumes of our journal, some of which are discussed while others (all of them are poems) are quoted in extenso.
- Dorota Sutkowska: A Poem for the Seventieth Birthday of "Meander" . . . 209
A list of topics that could have been discussed in our journal, but fortunately they did not strike our authors' fancy and hopefully will never appear on the pages of "Meander".